County group formed to promote area's image

"Citizens of Lackawanna Initiating Change" (CLIC) is a newly formed group organized to promote vitality in Lackawanna County. CLIC is comprised of individuals representing a wide range of interests who are concerned with the future direction of this area.

It is the intent of the group to help improve the image of the Scranton-Lackawanna County region. However, CLIC is also dedicated to realistically evaluating problems and translating solutions into positive actions in order to affect a lasting change.

Those involved in CLIC are from the business, cultural, educational and religious community. There are representatives of local government and the media as well.

At this point, committees have been formed and are working to address issues relative to community development, criminal justice, education and marketing.

Beth Beh, planning associate of the Planning Council for Social Services, and Judy Hochman, program director of the Jewish Community Center are the architects of the concept. Those interested in becoming involved in CLIC and willing to contribute their time, energies and ideas are asked to contact Ms. Beh at 344-7211.
